

Social Security Benefits When in State Hospitals

What happens to Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) when you enter a state hospital?

SSDI benefits continue unless a person is determined to be not guilty by reason of insanity (NGRI). However, the facility will ask that this resource be used to help pay for their hospital expense. In some instances, the facility will become your representative payee, but this should not be necessary if you or your representative payee can continue to manage these funds.

If NGRI, you will have to re-apply for SSDI upon discharge.

SSI benefits may continue for up to 3 months during a temporary stay in an institution if:

- A doctor certifies that the person is expected to be there 3 months or less:
and
- The person has a home and pays permanent living expenses such as rent or mortgage

After 3 months, SSI is suspended (placed on hold).

After 12 months, the SSI ends and will require a new application upon discharge.

When benefits are suspended or stopped how do you get SSDI/SSI re-started upon discharge?

Ask your social worker if the facility has a pre-release agreement with your local Social Security office. If so, the facility will verify your upcoming discharge and work with Social Security to help you re-start your benefits or re-apply. Your facility will notify Social Security if you are likely to meet the eligibility rules and provide them records of your disability. Social Security can begin processing your re-instatement or new application so your benefits can start soon after your release.

- TIP - If your facility does not have a pre-release agreement with Social Security they can easily start one at any time by contacting your local security office.

- TIP - If it has been several years since your SSDI/SSI benefit started your benefits may be ready to undergo a review to determine if you still meet the disability rules. This process may take extra time.

What about your Medicare or Medicaid coverage?

Medicare – Once your SSDI is re-started your Medicare should be available again.

Medicaid - If your SSI terminated while in an institution, then your Medicaid also terminated. Upon discharge the facility social worker should connect you to your local Department of Social Services (DSS) office to re-apply.
